Human rights are the basic rights and freedoms that belong to every person in the world, from the right to life and liberty to the right to education. These rights are not given to us by governments or any other authority; they are inherent to our very existence as human beings. The organizations such as the United Nations and the World Health Organizations just aim to protect these rights and make sure every person has an access to them.

- a. What is the text about?

- b. What is the basic definition of human rights in the text?

2. Write down the irrelevant sentence to the text and explain the reason. (2x10=20p)

Child labour was common in the late 18th century, during the early years of the Industrial Revolution. Factory owners wanted to employ children for several reasons. First, children earned considerably less than adults did for doing the same work. The women’s working conditions were very bad. Second, children were more respectful than adults in terms of completing work.
