Doctor: Good morning, what's the matter with you?
Patient: Good morning, doctor. There is a terrible pain in my stomach.
Doctor: When did you first feel it?
Patient: Yesterday.
Doctor: Have you eaten or drunk anything unusual lately?
Patient: I don't think I've eaten or drunk anything unusual.
Doctor: Can you describe the pain? Is it sharp pain or cramping?
Patient: It's more like a cramping.
Doctor: Well, have you been under a lot of stress lately?
Patient: But now that you mention it, I realize I've been quite stressed about my exams lately.
Doctor: Stress can definitely contribute to stomach issues.
I'll give you medicine to help you feel relaxed. Are you allergic to any medications?
Patient: I don't think I'm allergic to any medications.
Doctor: Ok, great. Take this medicine and also don't be stressed about your exams.
Don't worry, if you work hard you can do your best.

Hello, I've developed a rash on my arms and chest three days ago. It's red, itchy, and has small raised bumps. I haven't used any new soaps, lotions, or detergents, so I'm not sure what's causing it. The rash seems to be spreading, and over-the-counter anti-itch creams haven't helped much. I'm hoping to find some solutions to relieve this rash.

Doctor

Thank you for reaching out about your rash. Rashes can be caused by various factors such as allergic reactions, contact dermatitis, infections, or underlying medical conditions. Without a physical examination, it's difficult to determine the exact cause of your rash. However, based on your description, it could be an allergic reaction or contact dermatitis. I recommend trying an over-the-counter hydrocortisone cream and taking an antihistamine such as Benadryl to help relieve itching and irritation. It's also important to avoid scratching the rash to prevent further irritation. If the rash doesn't improve or gets worse, please schedule an appointment for further evaluation.

- A. When did you first notice the rash?

- B. Does the patient know what causes the rash?

- C. What are some potential causes of the rash mentioned by the doctor?

- D. What additional medication does the doctor suggest to help relieve itching?

- E. What should the patient do if the rash doesn't improve or gets worse?

6. Read the text and answer the questions. (5x4=20 p.)

Songkran is the traditional Thailand New Year festival, celebrated from April 13 to 15. It is famous for its water fights, where people splash water on each other to symbolize washing away the past year's misfortunes and welcoming the new year with a fresh start. The festival also includes visiting temples and paying respects to elders by pouring scented water over their hands. Songkran is a joyful and vibrant event, marking a time of renewal and family gatherings.
